Armed robbery suspect caught near campus

By Dustin Holt
Staff Writer

After a high-speed chase last Tuesday evening, Salisbury police and Maryland State Troopers arrested a female suspected of armed robbery. The chase led police through Salisbury until the suspect's vehicle was apprehended crossing the railroad tracks behind Pat's Pizzeria.

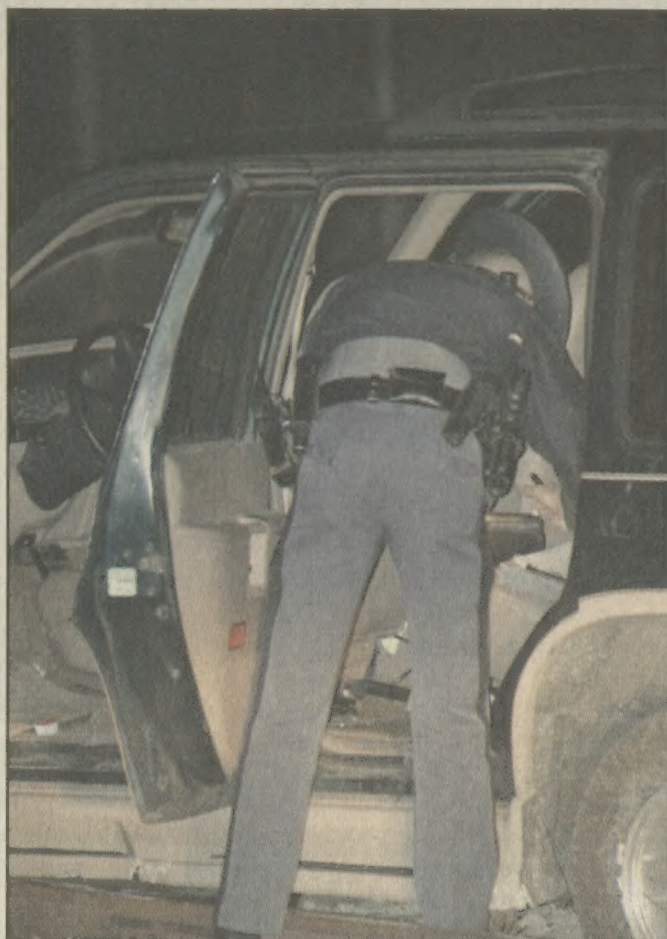

"At approximately 7:40 pm, state police stopped a green Ford Explorer for speeding and then Salisbury PD confirmed the driver was suspected of robbing The Pit Stop gas station on East Main Street and a chase ensued through the city," said a Maryland State Trooper.

Three Salisbury police cruisers and five state police cars were on scene. The Maryland police helicopter followed the chase overhead as the suspect's green SUV sped through Salisbury. The chase continued along South Division Street, then West College Avenue before ending behind Pat's Pizzeria.

After the suspect was apprehended, state police issued charges pertaining to traffic violations while Salisbury police officers dealt with the criminal charges relating to the robbery.

The identity of the suspect has not been released and city police are looking into the potential of a second suspect involved in the robbery.

According to police officials, no one was injured during the robbery and chase.

Local war veteran speaks about experiences

Local Korean War Veteran, Edward Theodore Taylor, spoke on campus Tuesday about his new book Just God and Me: A Korean

War Veteran Remembers.

"Edward Taylor has been a voice of wisdom in Salisbury especially in times of adversity," said Dr. Clara L. Smalls, history professor.

The army was integrated only a few years before the Korean War.

Taylor said during this time he received absolutely no kinds of prejudice; at least not until he came back to the states.

During his time in Korea, Taylor received two bronze stars for outstanding combat action.

Following his service in Korea, Taylor earned a bachelor's degree in education at Bowie State College and his master's degree in education administration and supervision from then Salisbury State College.

"I used my combat experience to help teach young students that there are better ways to solve problems," said Taylor.

During his speech he said that at the heart of his novel was a love and empathy for the orphaned children in Korea. Taylor believed it was a senseless war in which we "gained nothing and lost almost everything," he stated.

In his book Taylor describes the turmoil and consequences of being in the war and how he used what he learned to aid children and communities in Maryland.

Even five decades after the war ended every memory of it was still as vivid in his head as the day it happened he said.

"By writing this book I've become relieved to finally have my story told," said Taylor.

"During points when I was reading and editing the novel I actually found myself in tears," said his daughter, Debra.

Taylor has worked in education for 35 years and is currently a councilman for Wicomico County and is now working on two new novels.

Sigma Pi turns into weekend warriors for community

By Lauren Mitchell
Staff Writer

The brothers of Sigma Pi spent their Saturday giving back to the community of Salisbury. Participating in "The Big Event," the fraternity braved the rain and worked hard in attempt to rescue a forgotten neighborhood.

"Rose Street Blossoms" is dedicated to cleaning up Rose Street in order to provide a family friendly neighborhood. "People are scared of this area," says Eileen Gilheany, the program director for the Salisbury Neighborhood Housing Service. "We want to make it a nice place to live."

This wasn't the first time the Sigma Pi brothers lent a hand to Rose Street. They volunteered last year when 11 condemned buildings were knocked down. The goal is to give the residents of Rose Street and surrounding areas the chance to be the first to buy the new houses. Having volunteered themselves for the cause last semester, the fraternity knew that their assistance would be greatly appreciated.

Their main job on Saturday was to create beautiful landscapes around the Rose Street houses. About 25 brothers got to work, with smiles on their faces and positive attitudes in spite of the dreary weather.

"We dug up the soil behind the houses which felt like concrete, removed the rocks and bricks, and then planted trees," describes sophomore Brandon Brown, Sergeant at Arms of Sigma Pi. The men readied the ground to be made into yards, planted shrubs and other bushes, and helped create a pleasant view around the houses.

The Rose Street residents have already shown their appreciation. "People from the community were really supportive," says Sigma Pi's Vice President Eric Fooksman. "A few came over to thank us and to say how much it meant to them." Not only were the home owners interested in the project, but also some of the key decision makers of Salisbury. City Council President, Michael P. Dunn, even stopped by to view the progress and to demonstrate his support.

Green party candidate Ed Boyd campaigns on campus

By Byron Hurd
Copy Editor

Maryland Green Party gubernatorial candidate Ed Boyd delivered a campaign speech, sponsored by the SU United Greens, in the Pocomoke Room Saturday night.

Boyd, who grew up in Florida, is an anti-war veteran who has spent a great deal of time with counter-recruitment groups in the Baltimore, MD and Washington, D.C. areas.

"I'm not a slick talker," he said. "I'm a regular guy with regular concerns. No one can question the passion that I have for these issues."

The Boyd campaign said that in the wake of the 2004 presidential election, the country is ready to embrace new ideas. Boyd thinks that the "two-party deal" has corrupted politics and that it will take a strong third party to show the American people "there is a true choice."

"They both sold their souls," Boyd said of the Republican and Democratic Parties, adding that they are both "bought and paid for by big business. They may be on different teams, but they both have the same playbook."

Boyd said college campuses are the ideal setting for spreading the Green Party message, and previous social movements have "kicked butt" using the same approach.

He hopes that recent policy trends that affect college students directly will get them involved politically. "College tuition goes up sky-high and no one wants to do anything about it," he said. "They don't care about you," he said, referring to Republicans and Democrats.

According to Boyd, students can make a large difference by speaking to the undecided and non-political-affiliated members of the community and showing them that they have a voice.

Boyd also said the recent minimum-wage increase is insufficient. "I support a living wage, not a minimum wage," he said, pointing out that $6.15 per hour is not enough to live on.

He also took issue with the policies of the current presidential administration, labeling the conflict in Iraq an "illegal and immoral" war and calling for the legal recognition of same-sex marriage.

Boyd said these issues will be settled only when the younger generation steps up to take responsibility. The youth take the mantle and run with it," he said.

Letter From the Editor

New strategies for a new war

By: Justin Ritter
Editorial Editor

The International House hosted the first event of its lecture series last Wednesday with Dr. Cashman presenting a lecture based on the Bush War Doctrine and the War on Terror. The National Security Strategy of the United States of America for March 2006 gave a summary of the Bush-War Doctrine and the War on Terror which proceeds as follows:

"Defeating terrorism requires a long-term strategy and a break with old patterns. We are fighting a new enemy with global reach. The United States can no longer simply rely on deterrence to keep the terrorists at bay or defensive measures to thwart them at the last moment. The fight must be taken to the enemy, to keep them on the run. To succeed in our own efforts, we need the support and concerted action of friends and allies."

The United Nations Charter signed by the United States before the Bush doctrine agreed that, "All members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered." And under this agreed charter, if peaceful sanctions prove to be inadequate to certain countries, then the Security Council may authorize the use of military force. Individual states who have signed the charter may have the right to engage in war without a mandate from the Security Council only if the state is exercising its right of self-defense.

With the Bush Doctrine in effect, pre-emptive strikes have become an alternative to deterrence and multi-lateral UN measures. Pre-emptive strikes have been determined by the U.S. government as an act of self defense. And because under the United Nations Charter and the Just War Theory, self defense is accepted as a just reason to engage in war, pre-emptive strikes are now officially endorsed by U.S. foreign policy.

Because U.S. pre-emptive strikes are based on intelligence and not on actual strikes against the U.S., I fear that the U.S. agenda and the Bush Doctrine will open the doors for future problems throughout the world. If the U.S. can use intelligence to justify pre-emptive strikes and thus war, then can't any other country do the same? Everyone and anyone then can become a possible threat in a new world where domestic intelligence justifies the action of war. To justify pre-emptive strikes is to in effect dissolve the effectiveness of the United Nations Charter and thus further retain the hope for long lasting world peace.

The "Big Announcement" is not necessarily a good one

By: Contessa Crisostomo
Webmaster

Upon hearing the "big announcement" last Thursday about the incredible $41 million donated from Perdue and the state of Maryland, I thought that was great! Finally we would have money for the new library, parking garage and gym renovations I've heard so much talk about, but we never had money for. And then I learned that the donation was meant for a new Perdue Business School building and was appalled.

In comparison with the other academic buildings on campus, the Perdue School is quite possibly the nicest. If it isn't broken, why fix it? Like President Janet Dudley-Eshbach said, "This construction project went from being 'nowhere' in the list of capital projects for the University System to top of the list." No one is complaining about the Perdue School, why does it need to be replaced?

Do you know what students are complaining about? The fact that Maggs Gym still has no ventilation system still is a huge problem, especially now that it keeps getting warmer. Keep 911 on speed dial because students will be passing out left to right. Thousands of dollars were spent on flat screen televisions in the fitness room, but the only means of air circulation is still that one fan in the front of the room caked with dust from the past five years. Where are our priorities?

Our library, which at one time was ranked the 6th worst library among colleges, according to the Princeton Review, has yet to see any major changes other than new... signs. Parking is a problem that will not be solved for a number of years and is expected to get worse with the coming of the new teacher education and technology center. How is going to help that?

Why do we get large amounts of money donated for a building that is not needed, but other campus needs are to "become reality through creative fundraising," according to Dudley-Eshbach?

It appears that Salisbury University is trying to make itself larger than it is capable of being. So many new buildings are in planning, but where will they go? In the quad, taking away a place for recreation? In major parking lots, forcing students to find spaces elsewhere? What do we do when we run out of room on campus, start taking over people's homes in the surrounding neighborhoods?

Next year, the number of incoming freshmen will increase in an attempt to make our school larger. While that's a nice idea, we just don't have the space that larger schools do, such as College Park. Why can't we stay a medium-sized school? That's why most of us came here.

To clone or not to clone, hmmm...

By: Ryan Grove
Flyer Staff Writer

A Texas company recently cloned two champion horses for $150,000 apiece and plans to create as many as 30 more cloned horses over the next year. ViaGen Inc. of Austin, Texas seeks to make horse cloning a paying business and not a single government rule or regulation stands in their way.

This is not the first time that a horse has been cloned, as the first came in 2003 from Italy. While I can understand the purpose in using cloned animals for agricultural purposes, it could become a problem in other applications. The American Quarter Horse Association, and the Jockey Club, the association that registers Thoroughbreds, has prohibited registration of any clone or any horse born artificially. This is good news, as racing clones could prove unfair, and it could also be difficult to determine who won a race between Secretariat and Secretariat 2. The Humane Society of the United States is condemning ViaGen's actions, stating that cloning practitioners and advocates treat horses like "a commodity" whereas they feel that horses are "individual creatures who deserve respect and humane treatment." Scientific panels have also raised serious concerns about animal welfare due to clones that have died in the womb, or shortly after birth.

While horse cloning may be innocent and a huge stride in science, it's

The Rules of Sudoku

The classic Sudoku game involves a grid of 81 squares. The grid is divided into nine blocks, each containing nine squares.

The rules of the game are simple: each of the nine blocks has to contain all the numbers 1-9 within its squares. Each number can only appear once in a row, column or box.

The difficulty lies in that each vertical nine-square column, or horizontal nine-square line across, within the larger square, must also contain the numbers 1-9, without repetition or omission.

Every puzzle has just one correct solution.

Out of the suggestion box

4/11/06

This column is based on the comments and concerns offered by students, faculty and staff via the suggestion boxes placed around SU campus. The President's Office staff seeks responses to the issues raised from appropriate campus personnel. Not everything can be changed, but when not, a reasoned explanation can be offered. Keep those suggestions coming!

Lawanda Dockins-Gordy, Director of New Student Experience and the Guerrieri University Center, parried:

"Thank you for the suggestion to add an air hockey table to the games provided for student use. We are currently in the process of re-doing the game area on the first floor of the Guerrieri University Center and your request will be forwarded to the appropriate group for consideration."

From the Suggestion Box in the Guerrieri Center, Corey wrote, "Get an Air Hockey Table."

creepy to see what cloning animals could lead to. Are they going to try to clone Michael Jordan so that he can dunk on different versions of himself? Will O.J. Simpson clone himself ten times, to give himself ten times better a chance at finding the "real" murderers of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldstein? Didn't the movie Multiplicity teach us anything? A copy is not as sharp as the original, and a copy of a copy is even worse. Cloning technology could prove even more disastrous if it falls into the wrong hands. Dictators and terrorists could clone entire armies. Yes, we are talking Star Wars-like "clone wars" here. No American wants to see someone like Osama Bin-Laden cloned, unless of course that would give our military a better chance at finding him.

Cloning could provide problems for law enforcement if it ever got to the human level. Suppose someone clones a serial killer or any murderer for that matter, and the description given for the person wanted in those crimes fits the profile of twelve other versions of that person. While some may think that the government will never let cloning get as far as humans, we are already starting to re-grow portions of body parts in labs. Since we now successfully have cloned sheep, cats, pigs, and who knows what else, it seems like the logical but perhaps immoral next step is humans. While cloning would make it easier for Wigley to cast for those Doublemint gum commercials, the last thing the world needs is more than one Carrot Top, Kevin Federline, Star Jones, or Adolph Hitler. It seems to me that the idea of cloning is heading down a path where someday we will live to regret it.

Friend puts face to drunk driving statistic

By Sarah Lake
Staff Writer

The following is one of the many definitions for the term "statistic": one viewed as a nameless item of statistical information. By visiting www.duipictures.com, you can find numerous statistics compiled by the U.S. Department of Transportation pertaining to drunk-driving related deaths and injuries. For example, consider this: alcohol-related crashes are the leading cause of death for young Americans between the ages of 16 and 24 years old.

Two hundred fifty thousand people have died in alcohol-related accidents in the past 10 years; 25,000 people are killed each year, 500 people are killed each week, 71 people are killed each day, and one person is killed every 20 minutes. It is estimated that one out of every two Americans will be involved in an alcohol-related accident in his or her lifetime.

On March 17, 2006, Aaron Scott "Lil Beef" Nesspor, 21, died due to injuries sustained to his head and neck when his 1997 Jeep Cherokee veered off of the road and hit a tree. He fell asleep at the wheel due to the numerous amounts of alcoholic beverages that he consumed while partaking in the traditional Kent County, Maryland St. Patrick's Day festivities. He was declared dead at the scene.

I graduated with Nesspor from Kent County High School in 2002; I had known him for many years. I had a drink with him at the bar the night he died. Of course, everyone knew him. John Price, a former classmate of mine, described Nesspor to the local newspaper as someone who was "friends with everybody." He represented everything that was good, fun and hilarious about growing up in Kent County. He was a waterman, a baseball player, a fisherman, a hunter, a great friend and a fun guy to party with. His death both shocked and silenced our little town. News of the accident struck us with disbelief, incredible sadness, and anger. A week later, we buried our brother, our classmate and our friend. To the people of Kent County, Nesspor is much more than a nameless item of statistical information. He's the guy who threw the best high school parties in his grandmother's basement. He's the guy who broke the ATM at Suds n Soda because they didn't have any chili dogs. He's the guy who would have loved the fact that, at his viewing, there was a huge picture of his ass on display with the sign underneath of it that said: "Nesspor's White Ass." Now he is gone, and all we have left are memories of his crazy antics (many of which I can't describe because The Flyer would not be able to print it).

If you take nothing else from reading this article, I urge you to remember this: one person dies every 20 minutes due to an alcohol-related accident. As plastered as you may get, please try to think about how it would affect those who love you if you were to get behind the wheel of a car, crash into a tree and die. Nesspor had a 15 year-old sister, who, while addressing Nesspor's hundreds of friends at the funeral said, "Aaron, you let me drive the Jeep the other day. I only have a few more months until I get my license. If only I could have been driving you on [that] Friday night, you might still be here."

MASSIS Andre, São Paulo, BR

Was lured away from a pretty young thing and into a heated game of 'Fools' by his good friend Carl—more commonly known as "The Mayor of No Women's Land." While Andre made several attempts to step away and pack into contention with the said female, Carl's relentless pursuit for all things that don't involve getting some, was ultimately too much for the young Andre. He quickly found himself sweating it out over the air hockey table, from where he would catch a glimpse of his young beauty heading out the door with another suitor. Andre's game will be remembered by many, just not her.

SHIEH Hanwey, Los Angeles, CA

Hanwey was chatting up a Latin diva at an apartment complex barbecue and his game was hot enough to pose a fire hazard, that is until his friend and coo-on of horror known as The Mess entered the picture and snatched Hanwey up like a flash flood of distraction. Somewhat of a loose cannon, The Mess immediately engaged Hanwey in the age-old male bonding tradition of lighting one's own farts. Sure, there's little more enticing than the ignition of one's own combustible human gasses, but much like riding an electric scooter, you don't look that cool doing it. When the laughter subsided, Hanwey was left with nothing but a good laugh and the faint smell of old eggs, while his lady was snared by a new suitor. Man, talk about blowing it.

KUMAR Bharat, Jacksonville, FL

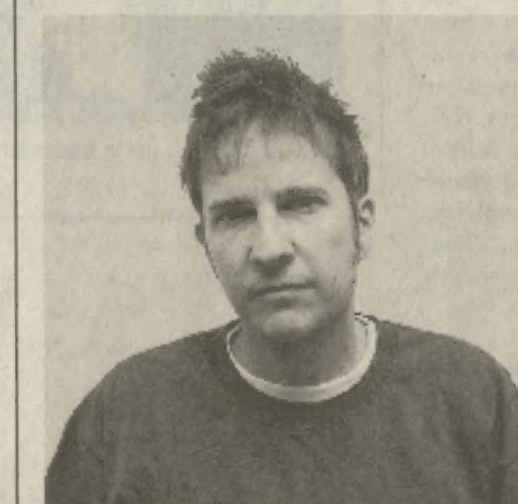

After losing his game to a leggy redhead at a dorm mixer, Bharat was interrupted by Trevor, a.k.a. British Accent Guy. Women are drawn to men with British accents, so all it took was a single "pardon" to make his girl raise an eyebrow toward this game killing Redcoat. This prompted Bharat to get riled by calling out the guy's busted grill of yellowing bad teeth and comparing the merits of baseball over cricket. The British Accent Guy smiled and opened his mouth only to offer small bits of nonconfrontational banter, allowing his accent to seep into the girl's brain like a piece of brilliant propaganda. In the end, the Brit would invade on Bharat's territory with ease, taking the girl, and leaving Bharat's game strewn on the road as a piece of collateral damage.

SMITH Eric, Washington, DC

His game came to its demise in the most unlikely of circumstances. While engaging in two of his most pleasurable pastimes: talking about boats, with his other passion, a beautiful girl who seemed genuinely interested. They were even planning to go out in his 15-foot dinghy, only to hit unseen rocks in the form of The One Upper, the classic Gameliller who lives by the motto "Anything you can do I can do better." Sure enough, The One Upper claimed to not only know boats, but he also boasted of captaining his own 40-foot vessel. Eric tried to navigate to the calmer waters of car talk but was run over again by The One Upper's supposed vintage German roadster. The tension quickly mounted, and soon the two were engaged in a ruthless game of one-upmanship. On and on they went, seeing what the other guy just said and raising him. When the smoke cleared, Eric had won the gloriest, but the girl was nowhere to be found. No one likes a braggart. Eric's game was last seen drifting away towards the vast sea of loneliness in an oversized boat.

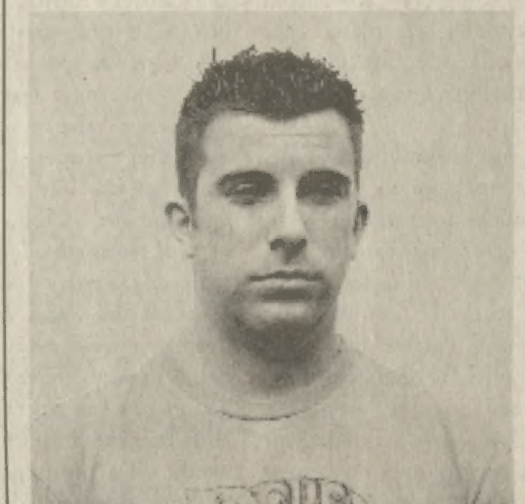

FOX Jon, London, UK

Jon's game, beloved to many a cheerleader and facilitator of the ménage of 2003, was fanning well at a Gold Coast club with a delightful pair of sisters. That is until the playboy predator and full time Gameliller simply known as Kash Munni entered the picture. A well-endowed socialite famous for trashing 5-star hotel rooms, Kash had traveled in from oil rich lands wearing expensive Italian loafers and indoor sunglasses. Drinks were bought for willing and unwilling recipients alike with his family's fortune, which he shamelessly flaunted in the form of an array of high status plastic. This caused Jon to suddenly lose his cool and go on the defensive by opening a tab of his own. On his debit card. After three rounds, Jon's account was maxed. Shortly after he was dropped off alone would Jon learn the hard way that a woman's affection should never be for sale, and that many a man has gone broke trying to prove otherwise.

Game Killed

UTSCH Chad, New Brunswick, NJ

His game was fanning nicely at the local coffee shop with a seemingly receptive latte drinker called Rita and he seemed well on his way to a little afternoon delight, that is until the corduroy-clad Gameliller known as "IQ" entered picture. This pompous scholastic scavenger, famous for luring men into heated debates on subjects of which they know nothing, overheard the conversation turning to art and pounced. Immediately he steered the dialogue into an area known as Out Of Chad's Depth where he would dish out ever increasing portions of intellectual emasculation. Chad reacted as anyone with a 20 point IQ deficit facing "IQ" would: the wrong way. No, the answer to "When do you feel Picasso peaked?" isn't to shove the questioner in the chest. Rita was left to apologize emphatically for Chad's actions and asked if she could make up for it in some way. Chad tried to recover, but it was too late. He had lost his cool, and his game would retire home, where it would begin its own blue period.

Avoid unwanted Easter pets, buy a stuffed one instead

By Contessa Crisostomo
Staff Writer

It may be difficult to feel spring in the air these days, but that doesn't stop every store from selling Easter baskets, plastic eggs and loads of candy. But the most popular Easter icons are bunnies and ducks.

Every year around Easter time, pet stores stock up on baby rabbits and ducklings and every year, thousands are bought in the U.S. only to be neglected or let go into the wild weeks or months after buying them. Parents buy them as Easter gifts for their children, without realizing that owning a pet is a long-term commitment and requires up to 10 years of proper care for the animal.

Every year the Salisbury Zoo receives hundreds of calls for unwanted pets. "During the spring, bunnies and ducks are a big part of that," says Salisbury Zoo Education Curator, Carrie Samis. "I would estimate that we get at least 30 or more calls just for 'Easter presents.' Almost all of the calls are turned away because the Zoo simply does not have the resources or space for all of them. 'We have to utilize the resources we have to provide the best care possible to the zoo's animal collection. That requires a lot of time, expertise and money.'

Let's not single out the parents, though. College students are just as guilty. Housing director Dave Gutosky says that there have been instances of students owning ducks and rabbits in the dorms, especially around Easter. "A residence hall is no place for an animal," he says. "The pet policy is written with specific things in mind, such as health, safety and maintenance."

According to the pet policy, no pets are allowed in residence halls except for fish, which must be in a 10-gallon tank or smaller. Other pets pose concerns for health and safety of both the residents and the animals. Gutosky says that students must take into consideration allergies as well as the preferences of roommates. "If a roommate gets upset, [he or she] has the right to tell the roommate that having a pet isn't okay," he says.

The policy is also in place for the health and safety of the animal.

Sophomore Shanley Crutchfield, who lives off campus, did not get her pet rabbit Zucchini for Easter, but as a surprise Christmas present. "It really was a lot like parents with their first child; it's a learn-as-you-go experience," she says. The student says that Zucchini was like a child to her and just like a child, taking care of him required a lot of maintenance. "Everyday I had to check his food and water. He normally needed a refill every day and a half," she says. "Every few days I would take out his litter pan area and clean that out. Once a week I would do a thorough, full clean of the whole cage. Also, I tried to make time to take him out and play with him, even if it's just him sitting with me while I watch TV."

In addition to the maintenance, there are bills. Rabbits need food, treats, toys and medical treatment. "I took him in for a physical - just a basic check up - and it was only about $45," the student works part time to cover expenses, but suggests that for students who are not financially independent, affording a rabbit as a pet would be difficult.

As an alternative, Linda Lugo, executive director of the Humane Society of Wicomico County suggests that parents buy their child a stuffed rabbit, duck or chick at a toy store instead. Buying a stuffed animal eliminates the responsibility of feeding, cleaning and nurturing for a real animal, as well as the costs of food, chew toys, cages and vet bills, while still offering a fuzzy "animal" to cuddle and play with.

Samis recommends sponsoring an animal at the zoo as another option. "Providing proper care for a pet is a big responsibility," says Samis. "If you think you'd like to have a duck or a bunny, consider sponsoring one at the Salisbury Zoo. For $25 you can sponsor an animal, get a certificate with a picture of that animal, and have your name on a plaque in the zoo. Zookeepers will take care of all the feeding and cleaning! And the zoo's free, so you can visit anytime!"

Senior interns with tigers to prepare for career

By Kristen Collins
Staff Writer

Senior Ashley Shirk holds a 3.5 GPA, is the Vice President Tutor of Tri Beta the Biological Honors Society, and can be found three days a week in the Genetics Lab inside Henson. Shirk is majoring in Organismal Biology and is working hard to reach her goal of becoming a Zoologist once she graduates. Last summer, she traveled to Gambier, Ohio when she received an internship working at the Siberian Tiger Conservation.

Last summer you went to Ohio to work with tigers. How did you find out about this internship? I searched and searched on Google for Zoology internships for foreveer, and came upon the Siberian Tiger Conservation. I guess I was having a lucky day.

What made you want to work with tigers?

I have always liked animals, and cats were the ones I connected to, as I grew older. I love them so I guess I want everyone to love them, and if we don't save them, no one else will.

What was your typical day like at you internship, and what are some of the things you learned? In the morning we would come in and prepare the food that is bought commercially. Then while the food was digesting, we would go into a classroom type setting, and learn things such as how much food you would feed the animals as well as enclosure environments, how to interact with the tigers' as cubs, and how to take their temperature and give them IV fluids. Later in the day we would clean the tigers enclosures, interact with the animals by walking them on a leash and groom them.

What would you like to do once you graduate in the spring?

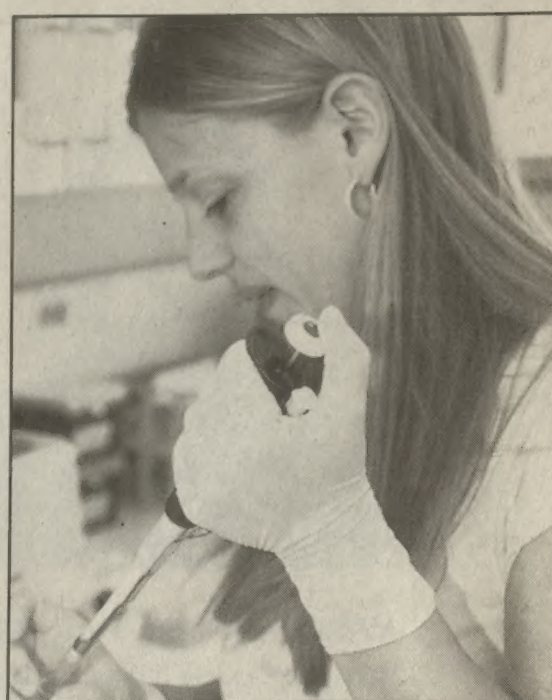

I want to get into a Zoological setting right away, but I don't want to spend my whole life working in the zoo. I would love to work in a rehabilitation program that helps release animals back into the wild. I would love to work in the field, like in India and be hands on when it comes to working with the animals in the wild.

You spend a lot of time in the genetics lab. Is that something that also interests you? What do you accomplish there?

I wouldn't ever want to work in a genetics lab, but since what I do here has a relation to what I want to do I use it as a learning experience. Dr. Hunter is great to work with here. I am in here three days a week for two hours each time. I work on DNA extractions, PCR, gel electrophoresis and I test new things called Watman Filters. Dr. Hunter introduced us to the Watman Filters and we have been incorporating it into our work. We are planning a trip to Honduras in July to the Wallacea Conservatory for Bio Diversity, and we are hoping to bring the Watman Filters with us to add on to the diversity all ready established there.

Professor's passion for art aims to spark inspiration

Kyle Sherman/The Flyer

By Rachel Lopez
Staff Writer

Dr. Anke Van Wangelberg is a professor of art history here at SU. Known to her students as Dr. V, she is a professor whose passion for the history behind the art is apparent. Not only is she a professor, Dr. V has also worked at the National Gallery of Art in Washington D.C.

How long have you been at Salisbury University?

I have been at Salisbury since 1997.

How did you get the job at The National Gallery of Art?

After I got my Master's degree I had an internship there, which is something I encourage all my students to do.

How long did you work at the National Gallery of Art? I was there from the late eighties to the early nineties. Right now I only work there on a project basis because I teach.

What skills do you think are necessary to work at an institution like the National Gallery of Art?

You have to have a lot of knowledge before you can get a job there. You also have to be able to speak different languages. I speak five. What are those languages? I can speak Dutch, English, French, German, and a little bit of conversational Italian.

Where you always interested in art history?

Yes, even as a young child. My parents took me too many art exhibitions and museums and that is how I got interested.

Where are you from?

I am from Holland.

How long were you in Holland before you came to the United States?

I lived there all my childhood. I was there until I received my PHD.

Do you have a favorite artist? I have so many, but my favorite painters are Jan Van Eyck and Jan Weenix.

Are you an artist yourself?

No, I am only an art historian.

Have you always wanted to teach?

Yes, I love to teach what I know. I love to share my knowledge.

Mr. Advice

Mr. Advice answers all your questions, even private ones, in complete confidentiality. Send your questions to: lb04128@students.salisbury.edu Don't be shy, ask anything!

Cherry Blossom Festival has been going on for a while now but my boyfriend doesn't want to go because he's got allergies. I REALLY want to go. What can I do to help him understand that this is something I've waited for all year? Well first you should let him know that you do understand his situation. He's probably going to want you to know how he feels because he would probably go if it were not for the allergies. Then you should let him know how you feel because you have been waiting all year and it comes only annually. A simple solution would be to have him go but to bring allergy medicine that hopefully won't make him too drowsy. I'm pretty sure he's got a good idea that this is something worth seeing and that it would mean a lot to you if he were to go with you. If he totally refuses to go with you and you still want to go, then there is nothing to do but just go and enjoy it. Bring friends and take many pictures for him. If he decides to stick around long enough, maybe he'll reconsider for next time. But either way, don't always limit yourself if he's not willing to go with you.

I can't believe how much time I just spent studying for this exam; I honestly don't know what else to do because I spent much of my spring break and lots of time before this exam but I can assure you I failed that one. How do I break this vicious cycle? Visiting the teacher and/or emailing the teacher about how things went would be a good idea. By doing this, the teacher may be able to help you with what you made a mistake on or how you studied it. The thing is, some people just have to work harder based on their previous classes and how they were taught or how much information was given. Find tutors, do problems and study more by quality than quantity. In other words, you can study plenty of hours and that could be nothing if you don't know what you are doing. Or you can find what you need to study and exactly how you are supposed to study it and make much more progress. Also, take breaks; maybe not long but every now and then to allow the information to sink in.

It's a good thing that this is confidential if I don't put names. My boyfriend smokes up A LOT and it kind of annoys me. I constantly tell him he won't be able to get a job because he always smokes up. And then how is it possible to pass the drug test? He won't listen to me - what do I do?

You may need him to have an interview where they need to have that. Companies see A LOT about person when they take a drug test. If they decide to do drugs beforehand, they eliminate all chances of getting that job. He needs to know that his future is at stake and that it's time to grow out of that smoking up stage if he wants a job or a career for that matter. If you've tried multiple ways of talking to him, have him take time to talk to some elders and mentors who have a different view. This may be the problem in why he won't listen to you, you're his age and on top of that, you're his girlfriend, so he may think he knows better than you. A lot of guys have stupid problems like that. Sometimes they just need an elder to put a reality check in their face. I'm sure that both sets of parents would be concerned about his future. So if he won't listen to you, try parents or elders, and if not them try friends. Hopefully the friends don't do it with him and they'd have a different perspective of it all.

One date, two dates, three dates, more!

By Carlena Mattiello
Life and Style Editor

It was 5:30 p.m. on a Wednesday night. Two people slowly made their way into the Great Hall of Holloway. A third followed skittishly behind. A banner atop the hall's entrance read, "Date-A-Palooza: 20 dates in 1 hour!" Awkward smiles were exchanged; however, except for a few low whispers, no one said a word.

A dozen more gradually trickled into the room lit only by the fading daylight and the glow of several, small teal light candles that illuminated a table's dainty flower centerpieces. Soft rock and songs of romance began to play.

Ashley Smith/The Flyer

By 6:10 p.m., the atmosphere had thawed and students began to let their guard down. Several broke the ice over a buffet table, filled with mozzarella stick morsels to fruits and veggies, by making conversation with other savvy singles. Others chose to sit and wait quietly as a few stragglers made their way to the registration desk.

Suddenly, everyone was asked to take his or her seat at the long, white-cloth covered table. After a short introduction, the buzzer sounded. "Date-A-Palooza" had begun.

Initially, the event was a way for SU's WXSU to raise money for Relay for Life. The idea came to WXSU's manager and director of underwriting, Joe Martin.

"Speed-dating is a new concept at SU," Martin explains. "We [WXSU] were looking for something different. We sponsor a lot of concerts but we wanted to try something other than music for a change."

After sporting the speed-dating scene in The 40 Year Old Virgin, Martin thought, "This would be a great idea." It was that simple. Martin had just snagged both an effective way to raise money and a novel idea that drew the attention of many around the campus.

WXSU's personnel director, Armando Santiago, believes the turnout was overwhelming.

"I knew this was a creative way to raise some money, but I never thought we would have so many students come just to watch."

As participants took their turn asking questions and telling stories, curious onlookers peered through doorways as several spectators watched the event from the balcony above.

So how exactly does speed-dating work? It's simple. In this case, a $3 donation reserved a seat at the date's table and the chance to meet 20 singles of the opposite sex. Women were asked to stay seated while the men circulated around the table, moving down one seat every three minutes.

Some students were shy, giving only a smile and short, sweet answers. Others stole the show, offering loud, confident personalities and endless pick-up lines. When asked why they decided to participate, replies varied.

Sophomore Mieke Jentis was simply out to have fun. "[I participated] because I just wanted to meet some new people," she says. "Nothing too serious." Sophomore Sean Gossard would personally like to see the event held at a local bar because it's typically a more social and relaxed atmosphere for students. Also, a drink or two always leads to more interesting conversations," he laughs.

In the end, Santiago believes everyone wins. "The money goes to a good cause and even if people don't wind up with a date tonight, they could leave with a few friendships that will last a lifetime."

Those who were involved believe this type of event is a refreshing change of scenery for the campus. The efforts put towards charity work should not go unnoticed; still, the benefits participants received are just as noteworthy.

Overall, those who participated say it was a good experience although many believe it would have been better if more students had "the courage" to come out and take part in the event.

From a girl's perspective

By Shanley Crutchfield
Editor in Chief

Speed dating. That just sounds like an oxymoron to me. Speed, well that's pretty obvious. It's going to be quick, maybe even rapid. Dating? To me, that's something that requires time - a decent amount of time. Not something quick. Twenty dates in one hour? One date every three minutes? Perhaps this should have been dubbed "speed meeting."

Needless to say, before going to WXSU's "Date-A-Palooza" I was a little nervous. You want to know what was going through my head? "Who would ACTUALLY and willingly sign up for this?"

In between all the doubting of the caliber of the participants, I also came to an important revelation as The Flyer's editor: I should never try to assign an article that I wouldn't want to take on myself. Lesson learned. Thank you, Date-A-Palooza. I may not have met my soul mate, but I am now a more sympathetic editor.

To be fair, things didn't go quite as bad as I'd expected. The guys who participated weren't aliens in disguise or totally lacking social skills. I was actually really surprised that some of the guys were even there. They didn't seem like they would need to go to a speed-dating event to meet women. All the guys I "dated" were polite and seemed fairly genuine. They had good eye contact and appeared to listen to what I said.

Meeting a guy in this situation was pretty cool. I'm a Baltimore girl, so I'm used to guys at bars or clubs downtown that think the sleazy approach works. For girls that are really looking for a different scene, this was the right place to be.

Of course, this is not to say the event was boring. We did discuss a lot of the basics: major, hometown, hobbies, favorite music, etc. WXSU even handed out a paper with a list of such topics to discuss. I had my own list, and that's where the good answers came from.

I asked the guys some wacky questions. I look for a sense of humor first and foremost in guys. Second, I want to see if they can keep up with me. Third, I'm looking for tattoos and piercings. Something told me there wouldn't be a lot of pierced or tattooed guys at this event, so I wanted to see if the guys were funny and on their toes.

"You'd so do me right now," one guy informed me. Granted this was the guy who, before telling me his name, admitted he was here just for the fun of it. This was worded as an obvious joke, so I really appreciated the sense of humor. However, my favorite line came when I asked a Flyer staff member if he was meeting any good women, and he replied, "You."

If "Date-A-Palooza" is held again next year I'd offer two pieces of advice. First, find a way to make the conversations more private. Between the music and the "date" going on next to me, sometimes I could barely hear my own date. And second, don't advertise with a movie like The 40 Year Old Virgin. The speed-dating scene in that movie was a total disaster.

I did not expect to find a girl who I could relate to, but I was proven wrong. Some of the girls I conversed with were interesting. What I actually talked about varied. However, most of the conversations were very formal and did not offer a lot of depth in conversation. I found myself asking a lot of repetitive questions: "What year are you?", "Are you from around here?"

However, there were some interesting moments worth noting. I saw a girl who I have not seen in a long time not since high school. Another girl, I found out, was first generation Dutch because I guessed it from her name, Mieke. There was another girl who caught me by surprise because she asked me, "What was the wildest thing you have ever done?" This caught me off guard since all the other girls I talked to seemed to be so reformed. At the time I could not think of an answer then the buzzer rang and I had to move on to the next girl.

There were two girls that I was interested in, so I asked for their numbers. I noticed a lot of the girls were friendly - none of them gave me a "cold shoulder," like one might get in a club or a bar.

The down side about the speed dating was I could never tell if the girls were being truthful about themselves, especially since I could only talk to them for three minutes.

Most of the girls I found were doing this for fun rather than to find a date. Some girls did not take it too seriously. A lot of the girls there I found were forced to participate by their friends - some already had boyfriends! One of the girls asked for my number when she had a boyfriend; she said she only took my number because she wanted to be friends. It seemed guys were more optimistic in meeting new girls. I believe there were mixed messages being sent - the guys were looking for a possible date, and a lot of the girls were just looking for a friend.

Overall I had a fun time meeting new girls. But I have to announce my disclaimer to the guys who participate next time. If you think you are going to find a girlfriend, you probably won't.

Realistically, it is just another event to meet new people.

Even so, many believe it was successful regardless of a few minor problems that always arise with any new activity.

"I had a great time and really enjoyed interacting with women like this," Gossard says. "I mean - 20 free dates. You can't beat that with a stick." WXSU raised $114 through donations and the auctioning off of two dates: Lucia Michel and Ashton Thomas. The highest bidders won the date and a gift certificate to a local restaurant.

As the night came to a close, students were much more comfortable with themselves. A few numbers were exchanged as many collected their things to leave.

The big question: did anyone find a soul mate?

"No way," sophomore Chris Gardner laughs. "All the girls I talked to were nice, but my soul mate is still out there waiting for me to find her."

As for the future of "Date-A-Palooza," Martin says it depends on what changes will be adopted. "I would personally like to see the event held at a local bar because it's typically a more social and relaxed atmosphere for students. Also, a drink or two always leads to more interesting conversations," he laughs.

SPORTS

Volume 33 Issue 21

By Kevin Froehlich
Staff Writer

Shut up and let me watch the game!

that's with the Chief (not Robert Parish) allowed only five minutes of court time each half. This is Michigan State, UCONN and UNC we're talking about here, not the Washington Generals. Billy, where's your head at? Oh, that's right, up Coach K's.

Hey hey, kids. Got a little carried away. But for real, CBS, next year, just give me Verne Lundquist and Bill Raftery. It'll be "the kiss" we all love.

Yet for as upstaging as Packer is, there is not a thing on this planet, adamant or inadamant, as cranium convulsing as McCarver.

(Interruption: I used to place Bill Walton way ahead of them on this list, like I'm talking I used to mute his games and then tried to guess when only the other announcer was speaking. It was a game of double-dutch, and I always lost. But now, he's grown on me. It started when Chris Laettner dropped a pass and he said, "Oh, Chris, sorry I hit you in the hands." Then it blossomed after Chris Webber forgot to call a timeout at a point he should've and the most famous deadhead dropped, "Chris Webber in a timeout controversy? How can that be?" And love happened after Webber played a horrible first half earlier this year against the T-Wolves and he said, "Chris, please, the game started at noon." Bill, you had me at "Chris.")

Anyway, back to McCarver. Everything he has ever said on air is 100 percent wrong. If he tells you one thing, do the exact opposite, no matter the situation or consequences. He's like my girlfriend, you know, if I had one I stopped listening to a thing he said a long time ago.

When I'm bored sometimes I like to pretend I'm a fly buzzing around the mound at old Busch Stadium while Timmy's trying to tell his teammate and legend Bob Gibson how to pitch.

McCarver, while shoving crayons up his nose: "Bobby, I know this guy can't hit your fastball, but let's throw a curve and keep him honest."

Gibson, pulling his best Morris Buttermaker: "Why don't you shut your dumb@$$ up and get behind the plate."

Listen, it's just sports. Tell me what's going on, hit me with some sweet knowledge, quote a coach or two and throw a funny one liner out there every once in a while. Besides that, shut up and let me watch the game. If I wanted mindless babble I'd let Packer tell me how great Pinocchio is because he's so "long."

Senior "A-Tacks" books as well as goals

By Shawn Nisson
Staff Writer

Senior Salisbury Women's Lacrosse attack Amanda Tack has tallied 49 points so far this season on 26 goals and 23 assists, making her the second leading points getter on the team. Tack is shooting 50 percent, is one of the team captains and one of the main reasons why the Gulls are undefeated on the season. This elementary education major hopes to help her team earn what has proven to be an elusive National Championship to cap off her senior season.

Where are you from, and what are your plans after you graduate?
I'm from Ellicott City in Howard County, and I hope to teach either in an elementary or middle school back home, and coach a high school lacrosse team.

What is your favorite food?
I like so many different foods, it's hard to choose one, there are so many different things that I love, so I don't know. But probably something Mexican.

What is your proudest moment on a lacrosse field?

Last year beating No. 1-ranked Middlebury. It was such a cool feeling, and then beating The College of New Jersey (TCNJ) for the first time in school history was really cool too.

What would it mean to finish your college career winning a National Championship? That's our dream, that's our goal for the season, it would be absolutely amazing. It's funny because our parents ask us if we want college rings, but we've held off because we want a National Championship, but then we don't want to jinx it either.

Do you have any superstitions?
No. I don't really believe in them. But I always have (sophomore mid-fielder) Sue Ackermann sit behind me during "chalk talk" before games.

What do you like to do in your free time?
With the free time I do have, I like to read. All the girls on the team like to swap books. I love reading Lance Armstrong's and Nicholas Sparks' books.

Lady LAX-ers easily handle Bears

The No. 1-ranked Division III women's lacrosse team Salisbury University kept their record unblemished as they easily dismantled the No. 15 Ursinus College 17-2 on Tuesday.

The Lady Gulls improved their record to 12-0 on the season on the strength of an excellent team effort, allowing only three shots on goal, all of which came in the second half. Attackers Amanda Tack and Kate Scott each contributed four points on the day, with Sue Ackermann and Ani Khatchatorian scoring two goals each.

With nine goals in the first half, the Gulls have now tallied 132 scores in the first half of their matches, burying teams in a hole that they're unable to climb out of. It was no different on Tuesday, with the Gulls jumping out quick scoring 67 seconds into the game on an unassisted goal from Tack. Two minutes later Mary Bateman fed a good ball to Scott which she promptly deposited into the back of the net.

Ackermann made it 3-0 on a free-position goal at the 22:48 mark. Liz Funk then added her 14th and 15th goals of the season in succession. Followed were goals by Khatchatorian (assisted by Erin McCarthy), Katie Simmons and Ackermann to cap the scoring at 9-0 at the end of half.

Khatchatorian started the scoring off for the Gulls in the second half for her 14th of the season. Kaitlin Glenn finally got the Bears on the board scoring with 23 minutes remaining in the contest. Salisbury responded with five straight goals, two coming from the stick of Scott, and one each from Tack, Robyn Bishop, and Stephanie Shores.

Ursinus' Debbie Jensen scored with just under three minutes remaining in the contest. This game, however, had long been over minus the final whistle. Bishop scored her second goal of the day and Carey McCrone capped off the scoring outburst for the Gulls with 41 seconds remaining.

"We were able to win the draws and we got after the ground balls, and when you do those two things, your able to control the ball and force the other team to play how you like to," said Head Coach Jim Nestor. "It's whoever wants it most, and today we came out played hard and wanted those groundballs."

The Lady Gulls play next three straight away games to end their regular season, but should host some of the Capital Athletic Conference tournament games which start on April 23.

Lister wins 100th career game

Senior pitcher Lacy Lister picked up her 100th career win and 1,000th career strike out in a double-header where the Salisbury University softball team swept the Catholic University Cardinals on Tuesday afternoon at Sea Gulls field 11-2 and 9-3 respectively.

Lister went into game one needing only two strike outs to reach 1,000 and with one out in the second inning. Lister delivered for the milestone.

Salisbury got on the board first when freshman Meaghan O'Gara scored on a double steal, tying the game at 1-1. Junior Nichole Fuqua led off the second inning with a double down the left field line. She advanced to third on a perfectly placed bunt single by junior Jodie Lehrer. Fuqua scored two batters later on a passed ball putting Salisbury up 2-1.

Catholic fought back in the third scoring one run off the All American pitcher, Lister. She regained control, though, getting a strike out to end the inning with the bases loaded.

The Sea Gulls took control the rest of the game scoring three runs, in each of the next three innings. Junior catcher Tee Dronenburg started the bottom half of the third by launching a solo homer over the left field fence. After a single by Fuqua and another perfect bunt single by Lehrer, sophomore Kurisha Hoffman smoked a two-run double giving Salisbury a 5-2 lead.

In the fourth, O'Gara singled and then scored on a well placed single to center by senior first baseman Erin Ruest. Sophomore Kirsten Wells brought home two more runs when her single was mis-played by the center fielder.

The fifth began when senior Kristy Schrader singled. The game ended when Ruest crushed a two run homer to center, putting Salisbury up 11-2 and above the eight mercy run rule.

Lister threw all five innings, allowing two runs on four hits while striking out ten batters, picking up her 10th win of the year.

Game two saw the Sea Gulls rally past Catholic with an eight run sixth inning to win 9-3. Sophomore pinch hitter Meaghan Murphy put the Sea Gulls ahead 3-2 with an RBI single scoring sophomore outfielder Ashley Stem in the sixth. O'Gara put the game out of reach when she crushed a 1-1 pitch deep to left center for a grand slam. Salisbury starter Wells pitched all seven innings, picking up her 10th win of the year also.

Wells gave up three unearned runs, on six hits while striking out five batters. Sea Gull leading hitter Ruest continued her fantastic hitting going 6-for-8 with four RBI in the double-header. The sweep improves Salisbury record to 21-5 overall and 5-1 in the CAC.

Track and Field improves times despite weather

The Salisbury University track & field team traveled to the Richard Stockton College of New Jersey in Pomona, NJ. They spent a rainy Saturday competing in the Osprey Open.

The men's team had a strong showing in their events, especially in the distance events. Among the men who had some great performances were senior Scott Koehler (second in the 5,000 meter run with 15:51.86 and fifth in the 1,500 meter run with 4:14.29) and sophomore Roland Lane (second in the 800 meter dash with 2:01.22). Freshman Josh Michael placed seventh in the 1,500 meter run, but ran a personal best of 4:20.84. Senior Will Murdoch was fourth in the 1,500 meter run with 4:13.59 and fifth in the 800 meter run with 2:04.13; sophomore Zach Reeser also placed fourth in his event: the 110 meter hurdles with 16.95 seconds. There was also junior Buck Stokes who took fifth in the 3,000 meter steeplechase with 10:23.61, sophomore Kevin Teal (fourth in the 100 meter dash with 11.41), junior Marcus Tines (fifth in the 200 meter dash with 23.38 seconds), sophomore Colton Vander Vliet (third in the 400 meter intermediate hurdles with 58.25), senior Derrick Washington (second in the 110 meter high hurdles with 15.44 seconds and third in the long jump with a jump of 5.99 meters) and sophomore Eric Graves won the 5,000 meter run with a personal best time of 15:35.38.

The women of track and field also had some great performances and improvements in times as well. Some of the women who performed especially well were freshman Jen Bulger (second in the 200 meter dash with 28.71 and third in the high jump with 4'10"), sophomore Alicia Canzanese (sixth in the 100 meter dash with 13.72), freshman Jessica Carey (fourth in the high jump with a height of 1.43 meters), freshman Kelly Sullivan won the 3,000 meter steeplechase with 11:46.35, sophomore Zuzka O'Zwoldlike (fourth with 12:52.85, sophomore Nichole Vivlamore (sixth in the 400 meter hurdles with 1:16.50), and senior Amy Lang took sixth in the 5,000 meter run with a personal best time of 19:50.23.

The head coach, James Jones, was very pleased with how the Sea Gulls competed against the rather tough weather as well as the teams.

"I think everyone did what they wanted by competing in some very tough weather conditions," said Jones.

The performances in the adverse weather conditions made the Sea Gulls confident for facing whatever challenges the Capital Athletic Conference Championship Meet has in store.

"The meet brought out the team's true toughness," said assistant coach William Detwiler. "While other athletes and teams gave up or even left, we pushed even harder and dominated the meet."
